THE LIVER.

Under the Sea they lie, The deep, dark Sea; No one comes there to pry, No man save me.

I and the Fishes dim. Swift, storing, stronge, In and about that swim, Whilst the Dead change.

They that each sit and stand In their own place, (Clammy hand clasped in hand, Wet face to face). As when through Night and Snow Struck the blind ship-Still seems the ery to go

Past the white lip. As I tread down the stair, First do I see (Round the turn, unaware) One who knows me. Stretched is his bloodless hand, Fixed his glazed eye; Though like a friend he stand,

Him know not I. No need to one the door: Soon as I'm spied,

Tread creatures cross the floor, 'Thwart the roof glide;-I with my Helmet on-That it must be Which the foul creatures shun

"Noath the green Sea-

But o'er the Dead, that all Seem to live still, Fearless they climb and crawl. Slow, at their will: Dumb, with protruding eyes Cast half behind, Horn and Shell at the prize

Most to their mind. Where twine dead Lovers' arms, There the claw strays: (Ill her corpse benuty charms

His filmy gaze!) Where the dead Wife's carcased: Where Mother's check To that babe-mouth is pressed Never to spenk. O ee these looked shame on me,

Now I'm grown bold. Under the deep dark Sen Shines the red gold; Through one kept watch by it, I took his keys; There did he stare and sit

While I took these O'er all that peopled ship Lies my dim way, What suits my mailed grip Note gives me "nay;" No man of those that lie

'Nenth the deep sea, Whither none comes to rry. No man save me.
